After two years studying biomedical engineering, Alessandro transferred to Manhattan School of Music in Autumn 2002. He contributed to performance classes there and in the Juilliard evening division, both taught by author David Dubal, and developed his understanding of historical music practice there. In addition to his classical works, Alessandro has also worked with popular music, through an arranging and transcribing partnership with lead vocalist of the contemporary music band 3D2. He currently teaches in Elmhurst, New York, accompanies and coaches vocalists, and participates in piano seminars guided by Mannes College of Music Professor Zelma Bodzin.
